We also checked out the gorgeously hand-painted Neoclassic Vicci 6.2 Emperor convertibles in the lobby, built by Palm Springs-based DiMora Motorcar and painted by renowned artist Master Lee Sun-Don. The vibrant paint job, 24-karat gold trim and the handbuilt 1930's Art Deco-inspired hot rods run for a cool $1.2 million each—so a bit out of our price range, but pretty to see.

Toyota's Back To The Future-inspired showcase drew our attention next. In honor of all of the hoopla surrounding the film's anniversary, the company outfitted their hydrogen fuel cell-powered Mirai with a flux capacitor, gull-wing doors, a Mr. Fusion tank, a stainless steel finish and a display for time-travel. There's also a Tacoma decked out like Marty's dream truck. And not to be out done, Lexus offers visitors a chance to try out their version of the hoverboard at the Ride The Slide feature.

Throughout the two halls, there is plenty to take in, including lots of debuts and previews of cars and trucks to come. You can get a sneak peek at the 2017 Alfa Romeo Giulia Quadrifoglio and its stylish predecessors. Or, there's the Stormtrooper-styled Fiat, the long-awaited 2017 Acura NSX, and the Porsche 911 Targa 4S, along with plenty other flashy new releases. There are also lots of electric, hybrids and more eco-friendly choices like the new, three-wheeled Elio Motors prototype.

You'll also want to check out Galpin's Hall Of Customs, which offers a cool showcase of rare and exotic rides. From James Bond's new Aston Martin DB10 (or the DB6 from 1966) to Scooby Doo's Mystery Mobile, custom hot rods to one of the world's smallest cars, there's plenty to admire and Instagram.

The L.A. Auto Show runs from November 20 to 29 at the Los Angeles Convention Center, 11835 W Olympic Blvd, Downtown. Tickets are $12 for adults Monday through Thursday; $15 for adults on the weekends, $5 for children and $10 for seniors. Tickets can be purchased here.
